SOURCES AND METHODOLOGY

Baseline Population:

The basin-level population counts are based on the 2000, 2010, and 2020 Census. The data was collected in census block groups and intersected with drainage basin. The drainage basin-specific model used the assumption that population is uniformly distributed within each census block group.

Population Forecast:

Population projections are based on a weighted average of a lower decline limit and an upper growth limit. The lower limit is based on a statistical curve fitted to the fluctuating but generally declining population of each drainage basin from 2000-2020. The upper limit population projection is based on the nexus of housing supply and demographic trends, utilizing household size, housing unit growth, and occupancy level from 2010 to 2019 using Census and ACS 5-year data. Both models made the following assumptions: population is uniformly distributed within each census block group, the proportion of city population in each drainage basin will remain constant based on 2020 data, and future occupancy rates will remain constant based on the 2020 occupancy rate. The final projection is a weighted average that changes over time to account for the statistical smoothing of historical population curves, which in this case indicate recent growth amid a longer-term stagnation or decline. Near-term averages weight the growth scenario more heavily, while long-term averages are balanced between the growth and decline scenarios.
